Strong clinical skills

professionalism, understanding of the counseling field

They understand therapy as a service and are prepared to work with clients immediately.

I find that WKU's counseling students do come better prepared with clinical knowledge than other local counseling program's students as well as social work students. The students that I have worked with have been professional and very intentional and motivated with their work. I have appreciated their desire to learn and their engagement with my clinical team.

I've been very impressed by the excitement, focus, passion, knowledge, insight, and hunger for growth from students I've taught in internship class and the intern I've had. I would have taken more interns had I had the office space for them.

Interns are very well versed in the academics of counseling; however, they often tend to struggle more in areas such as note-writing, treatment planning, etc. This is to be expected though as practicum and internship is the place they would be getting a lot of training in these areas so not a weakness of the program but rather where students naturally are in their development at the beginning of practicum.

More depth of theoretical orientation, improved skills in treatment planning, clinical records from intake through termination.

I find that the program is not providing a solid foundation in Cognitive Behavioral Therapy. I understand some of the reasons for this within the program, but I feel it is a disadvantage for your graduates. It is also more challenging for me as a supervisor and employer of WKU counseling graduates to provide this education through continuing education. I often find that students have not been given a good understanding of what is or is not evidenced based practice and many of the approaches that they are introduced to require more training in order to be able to offer effective treatment. I was also disappointed that the lack of supervision over the winter break was not communicated with more notice so that plans could have been put in place sooner with our intern's clients.

I think the program is excellent as it!

I have delivered supervision digitally but mainly only during COVID due to state and university precautions during that time period.

I'm not a fan of online supervision as the screen for me blocks the human connection that you get in person. During supervision, I might come up with an idea for a handout or book that I'll get up and grab and share. I can't do this if we're online. Something is just missed when you're doing supervision online vs in person. I feel the same with having taught internship class online. Students are less talkative than when I've had them in class. I'm less talkative than when I'm in person. I feel like the opportunity for spontaneous discussions, questions, and general rapport building is stifled online. We can't draw from each other's energy and I believe in our field, that is super important. One of the struggles people already have is feeling disconnected because of so many things being online, I don't think we need to add to that if we don't have to.

If I had to, I'd use a HIPAA compliant video system.
